Ian was born in Birmingham, England in 1946. A tool-maker by trade, and self confessed Corydoras nut by admission, Ian started keeping tropical fish in 1970 in a small 18-inch aquarium, it was not very long before he had two four-foots and two three-foots set up in the spare room. Over the first two or three years he kept and bred many of the popular fish groups, starting with South American Cichlids, graduating through Barbs, Anabantids and Characins.

He bred his first species of Corydoras in 1974. To date, Ian has successfully spawned and raised more than seventy species of Corydoradinae Catfish; sixty-seven of these are featured in the form of spawning logs in his book, Breeding Corydoradinae Catfish. Published in 2005, Ian Fuller and Hans-Georg Evers co-authored a new book entitled, Identifying Corydoradinae Catfish.
